On The Hill

July was an action-packed month on the Hill as Congress worked hard to wrap up several high priority agenda items ahead of the August recess. With negotiations stalling on the Bipartisan Innovation Act, Congress was urged by the national security community to act with urgency to pass the CHIPS Act portion of the bill (which funds domestic semiconductor manufacturing) as a standalone. Congress worked quickly to pass a package which included the CHIPS Act as well as several other research and development and education provisions from the broader USICA/COMPETES Act negotiations that had bipartisan support.

Congress continues to move through the 2023 budget cycle, with the House passing their suite of appropriations bills in July. The House-passed bills had particularly significant increases to the budget for the Department of Education. The Senate released their draft bill text last week, giving us a fuller picture of the differences and similarities between the two chambers. The Senate is expected to move forward with these bills after the August recess. Given the fiscal year is set to end on September 30, our team has been told that they will first pass a continuing resolution which will push a final vote on the 2023 budget to after the November election.

Another big announcement that came in this month confirmed what we had already been told: Senator Manchin and Senator Schumer had been negotiating for several months on an updated budget reconciliation package similar to last year's unpassed Build Back Better Act. The two came to an agreement on a slimmer package that includes support for certain Medicaid reforms, tax changes, and climate provisions. If the package can win support from all 50 Democrats (including Senator Sinema of Arizona, a key swing vote), we expect this to move quickly, with the House potentially returning during August to vote on the updated bill.

Bipartisan Innovation Act

With the Bipartisan Innovation Act Conference Committee making little progress on a final agreement, Congressional leadership moved to pass a smaller, but still nearly 1000-page, bill which included provisions with broad support. The new “CHIPS-Plus” package includes many similar provisions to the original House-passed America COMPETES Act and Senate-passed US Innovation and Competition Act, minus trade and climate initiatives.

Division A of the bill appropriates over $52 billion over five years in incentives to develop semiconductor manufacturing capacity in the United States.

The largest section, Division B, is rooted in the science titles of the America COMPETES Act and USICA. However, those bills had two different approaches to boosting and re-prioritizing federal support for scientific research and development. The final package pulls from both approaches and authorizes over $100 billion in additional science funding at NSF, the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) and the Department of Commerce.

In particular, the Act establishes a new NSF Directorate for Technology, Innovation and Partnerships, whose mission is “to advance research and development, technology deployment, and related solutions to address United States societal, national, and geostrategic challenges, for the benefit all Americans.” The bill authorizes $20 billion over five years for the new Directorate. The directorate will focus on key technologies, including artificial intelligence, quantum, and synthetic biology, among others. Support for fellowships and scholarships and enhancing research capacity for HBCUs and MSIs is also addressed.

$10 billion is authorized for the development of at least 20 regional technology and innovation hub programs to support domestic leadership in sectors critical to national and economic security. The goal is to promote regional economic development and resilience (especially within rural and underserved communities), expand advanced domestic manufacturing, and address the intersection of emerging technologies and regional or national challenges. Of the 20 hubs established, one-third must significantly benefit small and rural communities, and one third must benefit states or territories benefiting from the Established Program to Stimulate Competitive Research (ESPCoR) of the NSF.

The bill authorizes new and existing research initiatives through the Department of Energy relating to basic energy science, biological and environmental research, advance scientific computing research, fusion energy research, high energy physics and nuclear physics. Within the education space, the Department of Energy Research and Innovation Act is amended to now authorize programs that foster collaboration between teachers at elementary schools and secondary schools, students and faculty at institutions of higher education, early-career researchers, and the National Laboratories.

Within NSF, NTIA, and NASA, the bill authorizes $13 billion for scholarships, fellowships, and traineeships to foster STEM education and create workers in critical fields, including to establishing an artificial intelligence scholarship-for-service program, a national network for microelectronics education, and cybersecurity workforce development programs.

Expansion of rural STEM education is also included in the package. The bill provides for research and development to increase access to STEM education opportunities in rural K-12 schools and to provide teachers with the resources they need to teach more effectively.

Some House Republicans withdrew their support on the eve of the final vote after Senate Democrats unveiled plans to quickly pass an unrelated partisan reconciliation bill, but regardless of this, the CHIPS-Plus package passed with bipartisan support in July. The President is set to sign the bill into law in the coming days.

COTA Act

The COTA Act has gained one additional cosponsor, Rep. Susie Lee (D-NV). While there is not yet a clear path forward for the bill this Congress, we continue to build support and anticipate that this momentum will be helpful in getting the provision included in broader WIOA reauthorization early next year.

We also continue to push for additional cosponsors for this legislation. This month, our team met with Rep. Susanne Bonamici (D-OR), a member of the House Education and Labor Committee and a key voice for workforce development in Congress about the bill and the importance of career development.

September Planning

We look forward to welcoming NCDA leadership to DC this summer to present the Legislative Award to Nick Rockwell, Legislative Director for Rep. GT Thompson (R-PA). Nick’s work behind the scenes has been crucial to the Congressman’s efforts to raise support for career development in Congress. While the group is in town, we also hope to set up a few additional Hill meetings with key stakeholders on the House Education and Labor Committee and Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee.
